Sometimes I think it might just be easier to hate Mondays too, to live for the weekend too, to complain about my job too, to have a planned life too, to have a company parking spot too, a lunch break, a reliable paycheck, an agreeable life, an agreeable lifestyle, work shoes, work-wear, work friends, my name on the wall, my own 2x2 cubicle I can't leave, the same commute everyday, the freedom to see the sun on weekends only, be required to ask for permission to travel, be required to ask permission to speak, be required to perform to make someone else's passion come to life.

Then I remember why I endlessly love Mondays. After dreaming and brainstorming all weekend, after late nights on Pinterest, sketching, thinking, listing, listening, templating, goal-making, brainstorming at cafes, researching at cafes, breakdowns at cafes, inspiration at cafes, epiphanies at cafes, strangers at cafes, building my dreams mentally at cafes- On Mondays? I strive to build to the stars whether or not it seems agreeable.
